Dear Headmaster,

Visiting your school on Thursday _____ to choose their own classes. Since the beginning, I was skeptical of your decision to carry out this experiment, and its folly was apparent in the lack of discipline and enthusiasm shown by your students. It is imperative that you re-implement the more structured curricula used in the past. It is the height of gullibility to expect teenagers to be mature enough to eschew easy-to-pass subjects for more academically rigorous courses. You need to act now for the sake of our children.

Sincerely,

Evelyn Hertford

Concerned parent

- (a) allowed me to see the drawbacks of not giving teens the chance
- (b) convinced me of the need to allow adolescents in the community
- (c) revealed the foolishness of allowing high school students
- (d) showed the curriculum's effect on the willingness of pupils

According to Phoenician mythology, the god Eshmun _____. He was born a mere mortal and became fond of hunting during his teenage years. One day, while tracking an animal in the forest, he was seen by the powerful goddess Astronoë, who became enamored with him. To stop her romantic advances, he maimed himself and died from the resulting blood loss. Still, Astronoë had her way by bringing the inanimate youth back to life and turning him into the god of healing. Eshmun, left with no choice, became her consort and many devotees venerated them together as a couple.

- (a) pursued several nymphs in the woods
- (b) was able to cure his own wounds
- (c) became a deity in an unusual way
- (d) fell in love with another divine being 3.

Today, almost everyone in the world uses the Gregorian, rather than the Julian, calendar in their daily lives. (a) However, there are still institutions that persist in using the latter. (b) Based on the phases of the moon, the Julian calendar's predecessor consisted of 304 days over 10 months. (c) Many Eastern Orthodox national churches continue to use it to calculate the dates of their moveable feasts, religious holidays with dates not fixed to particular days. (d) Some farmers in North Africa also refuse to change with the times, claiming that, in their area, the Julian system is more accurate for agricultural purposes.

This spring, Perabo Museum is having an exhibition of precious gems set in jewelry. Feast your eyes on bejeweled necklaces, tiaras, bracelets, earrings, and brooches loaned by prominent collectors. Featured in the display is the famous Kraut Pink Diamond, a 253-carat stone in a platinum setting that forms the centerpiece of a butterfly-shaped pendant. An audio tour is included in the ticket cost. Alternatively, a guided tour with a trained member of staff can be arranged upon request for a nominal fee. The exhibit can be viewed by the public from Tuesday to Sunday, between 9:30 a.m. and 7:30 p.m.

Q: Which statement is correct according to the advertisement?

- (a) The fee covers a recorded commentary about the display.
- (b) Perabo Museum is open to the public every weekday.
- (c) The exhibit features a butterfly-themed jewelry collection.
- (d) Guests can catch a glimpse of a rare pink platinum pendant.

During the last federal election, the Liberal Party faced allegations that focusing on the environment rather than industry would lead to higher unemployment. Two years since the party's win, however, it has created 550,000 jobs in contrast to the 330,000 that the former Conservative government created during its own first two years. However, detractors say the comparison is unfair as it fails to take into account that the nation was in a recession when the Conservatives came to power. It took considerable effort on the Conservative government's part to turn the situation around by its final year, they argue, and their achievement explains why the Liberals are doing well now.

Q: What are critics claiming about the Liberal government?

- (a) Its jobs-creation policy is falling short of expectations.
- (b) It owes its success to the work of an opposing political party.
- (c) Its focus on the environment is leading to another recession.
- (d) It is ignoring how citizens' views have changed in two years.

6-7. The 19th-century German philosopher Arthur Schopenhauer was one of the first Western thinkers to conclude that the world we live in is fundamentally irrational. According to Schopenhauer, this is because the motivating force of everything that exists is the will. Rather than striving to act according to reason, the will is merely concerned with self-preservation and the satisfaction of basic desires. This means that humans are in a constant state of selfish struggle to preserve themselves above all others, with the result being constant suffering.

While Schopenhauer's view of life is not a pleasant one, he does offer a means for breaking the vicious circle that we are stuck in on account of the will. Since the will does not bring about any good results, it is up to us to weaken it as far as possible. This can be accomplished through aesthetic means, by refusing to bow to the will's demands and giving it the opposite of what it is seeking. Over time, such efforts will weaken the will and drastically improve our experience of life.

6.Q: What is the passage mainly about?

- (a) An individual's perspective of the world
- (b) A description of the writer's moral compass
- (c) A discussion about humanity's fundamental desires
- (d) An interpretation of irrational thoughts

7.Q: What can be inferred about Schopenhauer from the passage?

- (a) He argued that personal opinions were unimportant to life experiences.
- (b) He followed an aesthetic lifestyle to remove external influences.

(c) He was supported by the work of other German philosophers.

(d) He believed that humans have the ability to limit their selfishness.
